What does APC Discount mean?

APC stands for Article Processing Charge – a fee authors pay to make to publish their articles.

Through DTU Library, you can get a discount on the APC when publishing in selected journals, helping to reduce the cost of Open Access publishing.

How to save money on your publishing cost

Go to the DTU APC Discount site:

What does the site tell me?

Here you can discover where to obtain discounts on Open Access publishing. Some journals even allow you to publish Open Access for free!

What does the site not tell me?

DTU Open Access Discount applies only to journals where DTU researchers receive a discount on Open Access publishing. Not all journals are included in the tool; if a journal isn't listed, a discount isn't available through DTU Library's subscriptions.

Who covers the rest?

The corresponding author is responsible for all aspects of the article's publication. Authors should ensure that publication expenses are identified and budgeted for at an early stage of the research project. DTU Library does not cover publishing costs.

Publisher agreements may change and this might not be immediately reflected in the information on our website.
